We, Suprema Inc, here by, certify that Suprema's fingerprint terminals extract the fingerprint data points from the raw image and create a template from this data and don't keep the raw image in the device. In order to secure this template, cryptographic tools and encryption methods are used such as 256bit AES encryption making it very difficult to access the necessary data to reverse engineer the process. The ability to reduplicate the original image and prove the identity via a fingerprint expert is not possible.

Even in case of some privacy concerns even from those with full knowledge of biometrics, there is an alternative; "template-on-card" keeps all information on the card itself. With template-on-card, all the information (data) remains on the card. There is no database with people's individual data or their biometrics. Your card with your personal data goes with you, keeping it in your control. BioStation Mifare, BioEntry Plus Mifare and BioLite Net featuring 13.56MHz RFID technology to eliminate the difficulty of template management and privacy concern by storing a biometric data on a Mifare smart card. In a template on card operation, BioStation, BioEntry Plus Mifare and BioLite Net don't store an user's fingerprint data into its internal memory but on a smart card. Access is granted when a fingerprint of a card holder is verified success with the template on the card. This eliminates privacy concern of leaving fingerprint data on a device while removing the limit in the number of users.
