

Phill O'Sullivan

Phill started playing drums from a pure love of music that he shared with his friends. It was not long before he was playing in multiple bands around London. Brought up on an eclectic mix of rock/metal, motown, classical and jazz music Phill has always had an open mind to all different genres and so enjoys tailoring lessons to different musical tastes.

Phill's first drum teaching job was at the acclaimed Aiglon College in Switzerland, before moving back to the UK to study Jazz Studies at Chichester University. Throughout his musical career, Phill has toured internationally and performed in front of thousands of people on many stages including the Glastonbury Festival, Big Chill Festival, Nice and Montreux Jazz Festivals and other renowned London music venues including London's The Garage and The Jazz Cafe.

Since moving to Wales alongside being an active gigging musician, Phill has spent the last 15 years working for Community Music Wales, Gwent Music Service and offering Drum kit tuition in many local schools throughout South Powys. Phill teaches all drum kit Grades but also likes to nurture the joy of playing drums and to inspire his pupils through the living language of music. Lessons are bespoke and geared to the student's musical interests and most of all fun!

Phill is very proud of his students and is delighted to see some of his past students following successful careers in drumming, including one student who is currently playing for the original Abba!
